CHOICE FOR CONGRESSMAN

Joe B. Bates of Greenup was named at Ashland last Saturday as the Democratic candidate for Congressman from the Ninth Congressional District to succeed Fred M. Vinson who resigned to accept a Federal Judgeship.

Mr. Bates is well known over the whole of this district and has been prominent in Democratic party councils for many years.

The Republicans have also named a candidate—a Mr. Sparks of Ashland—so that there may be some one of whom to say, "He also ran." The special election will be held on Saturday, June 4, 1938. The primary in which to nominate the candidates for the full two year term will be held August 2.

American Nitrate Industry Symbolizes South's Progress

Growth in Past Decade Exceeds All Previous Records

"Keep All Your Bets on Dixie" advises a recent editorial in the Progressive Farmer, which calls attention to a report by the U. S. Census Bureau showing that the Southern states are gaining in population twice as fast as all the rest of the country.

Economists have been quick to point to these figures as evidence that industrial expansion in the South in the past decade has been responsible in no small measure for the gain in population and opportunity in the South.

Among the new major industries now located in the South, paper and chemical production are by far the largest. Judging by the progress the Southern paper industry is making, under the impetus of Dr. Charles H. Herty's pioneering research, it is anticipated that America may soon be independent of foreign pulp supplies. What this means to the South is indicated by government figures showing that in the year 1934, America imported $61,825,000 worth of wood pulp, representing 1,612,478 long tons.

The chemical industry, widely hailed as the great industry of the future, has also located many important units in the South in the last ten years. Outstanding among these is the giant nitrate plant at Hopewell, Virginia, which has made America independent of foreign sources for its nitrogen supplies.

The Hopewell plant was first placed in operation in 1923, and now produces a large part of the nation's commercial nitrogen. It is the largest plant in the world manufacturing nitrate of soda, which is used extensively by Southern farmers for side or top-dressing cotton, corn, grain, and other crops. The production of this commodity is a vast industry, directly and indirectly contributing millions of dollars annually to the payrolls of Southern workers, and adding thousands of carloads of freight to the traffic over Southern railroads. It has also been a principal factor in bringing about lower nitrate costs to Southern farmers, and serves as a valuable asset to the nation's defense.

Southern leaders agree that this industrial activity, and its further increase in the coming years, will go far in helping the South achieve its economic destiny.

FARMERS' COLUMN

KENTUCKY FARM NEWS

If one has a good farm, then "hominy" is a good thing to have. The best of the "hominy" has been received at the Rockcastle County fair. The hominy was made by the Rockcastle County hominy makers. It is a streamline hominy, they affirmed stoutly.

A hen that lays 27 eggs in 30 days—that is the kind of a hen to have, in the opinion of J. R. McDowell in Caldwell County. With a record like this his flock last month was one of the best demonstration flocks in the state. Three of the best flocks were in Caldwell county.

Ormsby Village in Jefferson county has 4,000 chicks, all in a healthy condition. Expecting to make a profit on the birds, they have installed modern brooding and laying house equipment and plan to appeal to out-of-season buyers.

Plans of sheep owners in Union County for the month of May include the sale of 75 registered rams and an equal number of ewes at Evansville, and a field day and barbecue May 31. The Golden Hoot club is sponsoring the cooperative marketing of wool through the Kentucky Wool Pool.

More money for eggs by wise marketing—Monroe County farmers have attained this goal. By shipping eggs to Georgia, to the Atlantic Blue Ribbon hatchery with which they have a working agreement, a good premium over local prices for No. 1 eggs is received.

Dogs constitute a distinct sheep menace, but poor quality is a greater danger, believe Carroll County sheep owners. Along with regulations for insurance and enforcing the dog tax law, they are rapidly buying a higher quality sheep to replace run down animals.

TOMATOES TO HELP

Farmers in Breckinridge and Hancock Counties in Kentucky hope to add at least $25,000 to their income this year by growing tomatoes for a canning business. The county agent has been asked to grow 400 acres of tomatoes.

Breckinridge County farmers also will increase the production of horses and mules. Under County Agent Will B. Ray, several high-quality black Spanish jacks have been purchased, and jack clubs formed in communities. Plans include raising enough colts to replace worn-out horses and mules on farms, and also a supply to sell into other counties and states.

FARM PRICES OFF

With prices of lambs, wool and strawberries off, the income from Kentucky's three major crops may not equal returns for 1937, it is noted in a market review issued at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. E. A. Johnson of the department of markets and rural finance made the following statement about market conditions:

With 15 percent more spring lambs to be marketed this year and consumer demand lower than last year, it is not surprising that prices are down $3 from a year ago. It seems especially important this year that lambs be moved to market as soon as they reach the 75 to 80-pound class because the lamb movement is earlier than usual from most lamb producing areas.

Conditions in the wool market are quite the opposite from a year ago. Woolen mills, for the past five months, have used less than half as much wool as in those months a year previous, and so it is easy to understand why the market is slow at this time. Increased activity and higher prices are expected in the coming year and, therefore, some farmers are holding their wool for later sale. More farmers than usual are placing their wool with the Kentucky Wool Growers' Association where they can most conveniently get an advance payment through the Federal wool loan program.

The Kentucky strawberry crop was ready for market earlier than usual, in spite of the April frosts. Shipments started in a small way about the first of May with prices around $3 per crate. Increased competition had lowered prices by the middle of May when the berry movement was at its height, but berry growers were still able to show a profit. Cool weather delayed the ripening of berries last week and thus helped to extend the picking season.

WATCH PAINT AND SPRAYS

Spring and painting time are again bringing reports to the Kentucky College of Agriculture of fatal results to animals from eating paint or licking newly-painted buildings or fences. Care is urged to keep livestock away from paint pails and from buildings or fences on which the paint has not dried.

Does, especially pigs, sometimes lick spray materials, and nearly all licks with fatal results. Reports also have been received of killing animals by giving them nitrate of soda instead of salt. Nitrate has the appearance of coarse salt, and can be mistaken for salt.

WASHINGTON NOTES

MEXICAN WORRIES

The action of the Mexican Government in suspending diplomatic relations with Great Britain has not helped in the solution of the crisis precipitated by Mexican seizure of British and American oil properties. The break emphasized the difference between the attitude toward the United States and that adopted by Great Britain. While the United States recognized the right of Mexico to take over the oil properties, subject to just compensation to the owners, the British adopted a sterner attitude, with a demand for a return of the properties.

While there exists some possibility that the difference between the two English-speaking powers might lead to serious consequences in regard to their relationship, the probability is generally considered unlikely. Of course, the affair has been played up in some sections as a major difference between the United States and Great Britain. Moreover, in the background is the question whether the Monroe Doctrine might become directly involved if the British undertake anything like a power demonstration against Mexico. This is extremely unlikely.

HELIUM

Dr. Hugo Eckener, German dirigible expert, who came to this country in an effort to secure ten million cubic feet of helium to inflate and operate a zeppelin built to replace the Hindenburg, finds his mission blocked by the opinion of competent military experts in this country that helium is of military importance. Secretary Lick, whose consent is necessary before the helium can be exported, says that the U. S. Congress amends the act and makes it more stringent, he cannot export the helium. The military officials, consequently, the chance for Dr. Eckener to secure favorable action on his request is extremely slim.

PRIMARIES

There is considerable speculation as to the part President Roosevelt plans to play in the primary elections this summer. Already the President has requested Senator McAdoo of California to run again for the Senate and has made a similar endorsement of Senator Duff, of Wisconsin. He is expected to make at least one speech in Kentucky in the interest of Alben W. Barkley, the Senate Majority leader, who is being opposed by Governor Chandler. Whether the President takes a direct hand in the primaries of his party during the summer months, it may be taken for granted that he will seek occasions to present his views to the electorate.

NON-RECOGNITION

Secretary of State Cordell Hull announces that the United States will continue to refuse to recognize the conquest of Ethiopia or of Manchukuo. Non-recognition of the Ethiopian conquest will probably not have much effect in Europe where Great Britain and France, at least, seem ready to recognize the conquest as a fact. In the far East, the situation is different and the refusal of the United States to recognize Japanese conquests in China is said to be worth something to the Chinese. In addition, the United States is on record as being generally opposed to the use of military force to secure national ends.

Anthracite Coal

Anthracite coal is the result of a 40-foot layer of peat being compressed down into a one-foot layer.

HEY MOTORISTS! LISTEN!

BRAKE HANDLING

By THE LITTLE ENGINEER

ALMOST every motorist could profitably take lessons from any experienced aviator on the handling of brakes.

How does a flyer use his brakes in landing on a small field? Well, he puts them on hard when the wheels first touch the ground and eases them up as the speed of the plane decreases. This is because he knows that the quick application of brakes toward the end of the run is almost sure to cause the ship to fall over on its nose. It is practically the same with an automobile. A quick, heavy pressure on the brake pedal when the car is moving slowly will make the brakes "grab" and lurch driver and passengers forward uncomfortably and perhaps dangerously. Such a short stop without warning may send the car behind smashing into the rear of your car.

Quick braking is not good driving. When approaching a stop, the expert applies his brakes in plenty of time to allow the car to slow down gradually without jerks and coast to an easy fearless stop. And he is particularly careful not to jam on the brakes when the machine is moving at slow speed. Learn to brake properly and smoothly and your passengers, other drivers and your car will all thank you.

Your Home CONSTRUCTION-EQUIPMENT REMODELING

Windows That Work

A good thing should never be pushed too far and that is as true of a heating plant as of anything else. No matter how efficient a furnace is, it should not be asked to cope with a heavy invasion of cold air through leaky windows. Nor should the members of the family be unable to sit with comfort in front of windows because of the drafts through them.

Bronze windows are highly effective in preventing air infiltration. Recent New York University tests proved that bronze windows admit only 0.4 cubic feet of air a minute, to each foot of sash perimeter, with the wind blowing 24 miles an hour, and only 0.4 cubic feet with the wind blowing 40 miles an hour—enough to make the glass bulge. That is very little air infiltration—only a fraction of that allowed in government specifications for bronze windows.

But, you may say, bronze windows are only for the rich. That is no longer true. Bronze windows are now being made for all types of homes. New designs have been able to combine the necessary rigidity with light weight, so that cost has been reduced by a saving of metal. Also, increased sales have naturally helped to reduce costs. So don't jump to the conclusion that bronze windows are beyond your means.

Bronze windows are not only tight. Their graceful design and golden color add much to the beauty of a home; they are extremely durable and don't need painting; they don't stick. Even a child can operate them easily. Finally, being airtight, they reduce fuel bills in winter and, if a house is air conditioned, help to keep it cool in summer, and at all times keep out dust and dirt. What housewife would not appreciate that?

Sprucing Up The Radiators

No doubt by this time your steam or hot water radiators are hot. Perhaps you had planned to paint them and didn't get it done before you had to start your furnace. You can still do it, although a radiator should be cold when it is painted and should be allowed to stay cold until the paint has dried. In the fall of the year it is usually possible to turn off one radiator at a time long enough to paint it without subjecting the family to much, if any, discomfort.

There are two chief things to bear in mind in painting radiators: first, the metal must be clean and free from all traces of grease or oil; and second, an interior oil paint rather than a metal paint should be used. Sandpaper and a wire brush should be used to remove all rust, stain and loose paint, the surface should be wiped free of dust and then cleaned with benzine to get off any greasy or waxy films. Special radiator enamels are sold, but flat interior wall paint, thinned a little with turpentine, is as good as any paint for the purpose. It has been definitely proved that the bright metal paints, once in vogue for radiators, retard their radiation of heat in substantial measure.

One other point: remember that heat darkens paint and use a somewhat lighter color than you wish for the final effect. And a long handled, slender, round brush is best for this work as it will enable you to reach easily between the leaves.

Tiles To Fit The Pocketbook
Back in the days when the writer, seeking to convey the impression that his heroine lived in the lap of luxury, portrayed her at breakfast time as "toying with a grapefruit"—back in those days a tiled bathroom was also considered an indication of wealth. And generally it was. Genuine single tiles put into place one by one cost money.

There came the time, however, when the beauty, cleanliness and water-tightness of tile were demanded by many people who could not afford the real thing. The result has been the development of a large variety of tile imitations that are, for all practical purposes, as good as tile. These imitations come in the form of large slabs which may be easily and quickly put into place, thus eliminating heavy labor costs.

Not only do they imitate the old fashioned tile, but also stone and wood, so that rich paneling effects of many kinds can be obtained by their use. Some are nailed to old walls; some are cemented on. They offer all sorts of surfaces from a high gloss to a soft wax finish. Many of them are fire and vermin proof as well as water proof.

The development of these panels was stimulated by the demand for tiled bathrooms, but they have found an ever increasing use in kitchens. The housewife nowadays wants the same beauty, cleanliness and washability in the walls of her kitchen as in the walls of her bathroom. The tiled kitchen has come into its own.

Why Look At The Street?

When Mark Twain built his house in Hartford he put the kitchen in the front so that the cook would not need to keep running to the front rooms to see what was going on in the street. Nowadays there is a tendency to put the kitchen and other service rooms in the front, not to make life more interesting for servants, but to give the living rooms a rear outlook. People are coming to realize that very often the prospect from the back of the house is more pleasing than that from the front, especially in these times when the prospect from the front is likely to be dominated by speeding cars.

This is not only frequently true when the home grounds are large, but it may also be true when they are small. When houses and garages are combined, as they increasingly are, back yards are usually left free of buildings. Prettily developed, even small grounds at the rear of the house may afford a pleasanter view than the street view. This is the more likely to be true in any district where most of the neighbors live in houses combined with garages and give serious thought to the beautification of their yards. The gardens and lawns of all may merge into a really beautiful scene.

Anyhow, it is gratifying, for the sake of diversity, to find house-owners breaking away from the rigid custom requiring every house to face the street. Now that back yards are less and less frequently marred by barns, woodsheds, chicken coops, clothes poles and the like, why should the old custom be automatically followed?

Taxes are a certainty anyhow, so why not pay them directly instead as part of rent?

Strength of a Lion

Naturalists have seen a lion leap over a nine-foot wall with a calf in its mouth, honeybees extinguish the flame of a candle with the breeze created by their wings, and a secretary bird, four feet high, kill a venomous snake with one blow of its foot.—Collier's Weekly.

If You're Planning To Build

By W. S. Lowndes

A SAVING in the first cost of a house can be made by using inexpensive materials in its construction and finish. Wood used in the framework and in the exterior finish of houses is the cheapest material available in the United States today, and is consequently the most common used. Houses built of wood require frequent repairs, however, and are subject to destruction by fire.

A house with stone, brick, tile or cement walls and a slate or tile roof will cost more than a house with wooden walls, but the repairs and upkeep will cost less. There will also be a saving in the cost of fire insurance.

Another method of economizing in the original cost of a house is to make it very simple in form. The distances between the supporting walls should not be too great, as the size and expense of floor beams and rafters increase rapidly when they are longer than 14 feet. Partitions in upper stories should rest upon partitions in the floors below whenever practicable. Flues and fireplaces should be grouped so as to require as few chimneys as possible. These and similar considerations will result in savings in the first cost.

Every owner would prefer that his house be considered beautiful. He is interested not only in its external beauty, but desires that its furniture and decorations shall be selected with equally artistic taste. To assure artistic effects the design of the house and its surroundings as well as its furnishings, is best entrusted to an architect whose good taste has been shown in completed work of a similar nature.

PERILLA, SOY BEAN OILS ARE VALUABLE

Purified soy bean oil has properties which lie about midway between those of linseed and cottonseed oils. It is therefore in a position to compete, at least to a limited degree, with either of them. With suitable refining, it can be used as a food or for soap making. It also can replace considerable amounts of the more expensive linseed oil in the paint and varnish fields.

The value of linseed oil lies in the fact that it is a drying oil; that is, writes Dr. Thomas M. Beck, capable of absorbing oxygen from the air to change from a liquid to a tough, elastic solid. Soy bean oil, on the other hand, is what is known as a semi-drying oil. It absorbs oxygen to form a resinous material, but when used alone never becomes completely solid. Paints made from it always will remain sticky. Its value in the paint industry lies solely in its use when blended with other materials such as linseed oil or certain synthetic resins. It is not an adulterant when mixed with linseed oil, as it produces useful modifications in the action of the latter.

The quest for oils for paint and varnish has suggested two new crops for American agriculture. As stated above, linseed oil is a drying oil, and a very good one. Nevertheless it is not the best available. That honor goes to perilla oil, which is pressed from the seeds of a small plant grown in Manchukuo and China. Perilla oil is a little too pronounced in its drying properties to be used alone, but when blended with soy bean oil it makes an effective competitor for linseed oil.

UNFINISHED WARS INVOLVE THE U. S.

England and Scotland used to fight over Berwick and at the time of the Crimean war there was still a question as to which country it belonged. Thus any treaty signed by England had to include a separate treaty for Berwick. This was overlooked at the conclusion of the Crimean war. Therefore the city is still at war. Technically speaking, with Imperial Russia.

Several other countries, observes a writer in the Washington Post, have unfinished wars on their hands. Liechtenstein, for example, is still at war with Austria because its peace treaty was lost in the confusion of Versailles and never signed. Even the United States is still at war — with the Seminole Indians! Following the last Seminole war, most desperate and costly Indian war in American history, most of the Seminoles were exiled to Oklahoma, but a small band escaped into the fastnesses of the Florida Everglades. Their descendants still live there. As no peace treaty has ever been signed, they are still belligerents of the United States.

Pharaoh Drew Long Bow

During excavations undertaken near the Sphinx of Giza, a limestone stele of unusual size has been discovered. It bears an inscription recording its erection by Amenhotep II in the second year of his reign (1447 B. C.). According to an authority the inscription is in the usual bombastic style of the Pharaohs. Amenhotep boasts of his athletic prowess, recording how he had rowed a boat for three miles against the stream with an oar twenty ells long without fatigue, when his rowers tired after half a mile; how he trained his horses so that they could be driven galloping without sweating, and how he had shot from his chariot at copper targets as thick as his hand and had driven the arrows through the targets.

Ancient Murder Bared

Murder of a Swedish nobleman 600 years ago was revealed at Bocksten, Sweden, by the discovery of his body in a peat bog. The workmen informed the city fathers, and experts reconstructed the slaying. Stakes had been driven through the body to hold it to the ground so that the ghost of the slain man could not wander abroad to haunt the murderers. The peat had preserved the body perfectly. The most remarkable discovery was the clothing, which is believed to be the most complete outfit of a man's clothing of the Fourteenth century that has been assembled.

Tea Blending Contest

Grocers and their clerks from all over England engage in an annual tea-blending competition for the Grand Challenge Blending cup in London. The cup is the classic prize in a series of competitions, which includes wrapping, weighing and displaying merchandise. The English grocer's clerk must know how to blend different grades of teas properly.

Sheep to Wear Boots

Poets penning lines about sheep may have to include rubber boots in the picture. London reports that experiments have shown that the common disease of foot-rot may be cured in a few days if the wool-bearers wear rubber footwear. The boots will have zip fasteners.

Jal Alai Strenuous Game

It is said that if Cuban jal alai players stay at the game regularly, they can live no longer than about eight years, so strenuous the game is.

COMMENCEMENT A SUCCESS

The Commencement week of Morgan County High School opened Wednesday evening with Miss Biddle's program by her music pupils. It was given in the form of a "Music Picture." The pupils made a nice picture assembled on the stage in their pretty costumes. Each one spoke distinctly and each musical selection was well rendered, which showed patient and painstaking instruction throughout the year as well as the drilling for the play. Even the smallest tots performed without hesitancy. The audience always looks forward to the number by the band, and, as usual they were not disappointed.

The Senior Play, "Trouble in Paradise," a three act comedy drama, with Miss Lena McClure as coach, was given Tuesday night. The acting was excellent, and the production was a trained director, but a successful section and training of the school.

The Junior-Senior Bazaar, Friday evening, was a success. A large crowd gathered at the bazaar, and the Junior and Senior classes were very entertaining.

We had no reporter at the Junior-Senior Bazaar, Saturday evening, but no doubt all the joy and fun possible was crowded into that evening.

The Baccalaureate service, Sunday evening, was preached by Rev. J. A. Archer, pastor of Lexington, who many had heard of. He read The Scripture of the Transfiguration. Dr. Gray showed how the "Moses" had not the parts that perfection has proved incomplete, but that when Christ came into the world, the spiritual side of man was provided for. The three fold nature of man, physical, mental and spiritual, is rounded out. Would the graduates have that fullness, that completeness, they must take Christ as their daily companion.

Monday evening was Class Day and, was it good! The stage represented the deck of the Mayflower which was a reminder that the first annual of the Morgan County High School was launched, May 24, 1933, by the Senior class and then sponsored, Miss Lena McClure. The Juniors supported the arch of dances on the gang plank as the Seniors walked on deck. There seemed to be some pessimism aboard when the grumble arose and related the nine months grumbling which was so annoying to the twenty-one members of the class. However, their poet, historian, crystal reader and historian soon had them on the sea of optimism. They enjoyed the beautiful solos by Miss Delphia McClure and Ted DeLong and waved the Juniors adieu as they sailed away.
